

How can art benefit the growth of a child?

From a young age, children naturally communicate through art. They get intrigued with colour and are often seen scribbling with crayons, markers, pens, and whatever else they can get their hands on. Children should be encouraged to explore art as it is not just a fun and a colorful pastime but also has a positive effects on pre-schoolers and young children.

ART CONTRIBUTES TO FINE MOTOR SKILL DEVELOPMENT

Educators report more and more children are entering schools with underdeveloped fine motor skills. Dexterity skills are typically taught at home at a very early age simply by exploring grip and pencil control. Creative activities are a fun and easy way to change things up and help with fine motor control. Paintbrushes are held like pencils, but the strokes are less exact and the result is a lot more exciting than writing down vocabulary words. Painting teaches hand-eye coordination as little artists attempt to draw lines, shape, direction, and patterns.

ART CONNECTS KIDS TO PEOPLE AND THE WORLD

Art is a universal language and acts like a gateway to cultural awareness. When kids start making their own art, they naturally become curious and excited about other people's art. The creative process helps establish a lasting affinity for arts and culture in kids that's vital to connecting to new people.

ART STIMULATES CREATIVITY AND PROBLEM-SOLVING SKILLS

An art project begins with a creative spark and lets kids bring their imagination to life, but it also strengthens their logical thinking skills too. Art is an excellent tool for helping kids take a creative concept from start to finish, work through artistic challenges and mistakes, and have fun while learning.

ART BUILDS MEMORY AND SELF-CONTROL

Having strong visual-spatial abilities leads to better memory and self-control. When creating an art piece, children naturally work on self-discipline. They can't jump into any approach, color, or technique they feel like if they want a painting that looks like a pair of cute pink unicorns or a space explorer. If they're painting from memory, they'll work on recalling images.

10,000 students in art classes showed improvement in writing scores and lowered disciplinary issues. It also boosted aspirations among school students.

ART PROVIDES REST, RELAXATION, AND REWARD

Studies have shown that art making decreases stress levels and lowers anxiety, helping with a child's overall mental health. Creativity — whether your little artist is doodling, sculpting with clay, or making noodle art — also activates the reward centers in the brain. For young people, this means that arts and crafts activities make them feel good and help them naturally relax. They walk away with a sense of accomplishment and the motivation to get creative again.

ART PROMOTES SELF-ESTEEM AND SELF-EXPRESSION

Children thrive when they can practice decision-making and express themselves without worrying about a right or wrong answer. They can learn how to trust themselves and communicate their thoughts and feelings with art. The more they can freely practice self-expression, the more confident they'll feel. It's also a great language development opportunity because they can pick up new art terms along the way.
