"It feels amazing," said the Russian on court at the end. "It's my first ever title that I won twice." Both men had battled to the final with demanding victories in the quarter-finals and semi-finals. "I think both of us were really tired after two three-set matches that finished late," said Rublev. "We were exhausted and it was difficult, but somehow we were able to play at a good level." After the first 11 games went with serve, Rublev broke the Briton to take the first set. The second set followed a similar pattern with Draper gaining the only break in the 11th game before holding serve to level the match. "When I lost the second set, I let it go and started to play more freely," said Rublev. It was his 17th ATP Tour title, but first since winning in Madrid last May.

He said he had gone to visit Nadal at his home in December along with Roland Garros tournament director Amelie Mauresmo to discuss plans for the tribute at the French Open, which runs from May 25 to June 8.
