World Water Day celebrated by students of St Joseph Vaz College, Cortalim

In celebration of World Water Day, the SY BSc students of St Joseph Vaz College Cortalim, embarked on an educational visit to the traditional kullagar managed by Purva Farm, Dabal, followed by a visit to a nearby dam on Codli River, as part of their Ecotourism Botany field trip. The visit was aimed at understanding the importance of water conservation, raising awareness about water resource management, and observing the current condition of the river. The river holds historical significance for the Dabal-Codli region as it supplies water to many kullagars and eco-farms that line up on the banks of the river. "Our observations revealed several environmental concerns, including irresponsible waste dumping into the river by the adventure buffs and picnickers visiting the dam, and the management of mining pollution from nearby Codli mines does affect this natural treasure," said Natasha Nadaf, a SY BSc student.

The visit to the Codli River served as a reminder of the crucial role water plays in sustaining life. It is essential to take responsibility for preserving water resources and ensuring their cleanliness.
