Power consumers told to relocate indoor meters by Nov 28 or face disconnection

Team Herald

MARGAO: The Goa Electricity Department has urged all consumers to relocate their electricity meters from inside their homes to locations that can be easily accessed by meter readers. A deadline of 28 November has been set for this relocation, with the department warning that failure to comply may result in disconnection of power supply until the issue is rectified. In a public notice, the department explained that electricity meters installed inside locked or inaccessible homes pose challenges to accurate billing and routine maintenance. As per electricity regulations, all meters must be positioned such that department staff can access them without needing to enter the house. Consumers are therefore being asked to identify a suitable, weather-protected location within their premises for the installation and to coordinate with their respective sub-division offices to have the meter shifted.

The department cautioned that if a meter remains inaccessible after the deadline, it could lead to temporary disconnection. In instances where the connection is permanently disconnected, consumers would be required to re-apply for a new connection and complete all formalities afresh. To avoid such inconvenience, the department is urging residents—especially those currently living outside Goa with locked homes and indoor meters—to take prompt action.

Consumers can find the name of their sub-division office on their electricity bill and are encouraged to contact the concerned officials at the earliest. The department also requested the public to share this information with others who may be affected, particularly friends or relatives whose homes are currently vacant.

For further details, consumers may visit the department's website at www.goaelectricity.gov.in or call 0832-2224680.

Ecological fallout: Elephants displaced by Kali dam project kill 3 Goans, says environmentalist

AUGUSTO RODRIGUES

KERI (SATTARI): As the legal battle in the Supreme Court of India between Goa and Karnataka continues over the diversion of the Mhadei river to the Malaprabha basin via the Kalasa and Banduri nullahs (canals), a sobering fact has yet to resonate amid the heated discussions — three Goans were killed by elephants displaced by dam-related work across the Kali river.

"One man was killed in Revora, near Mapusa, by an elephant that had wandered from Dandeli into Goa," recalls renowned environmentalist Rajendra Kerkar. "Two more victims were from Pernem taluka, including one from Ibrampur," added Kerkar, who is also the author of Glimpses of Goa.

According to Kerkar, any decision involving the diversion or sharing of water must also consider the fragile environment, ecology, and wildlife that the river systems support along their course.

Elephants displaced by the ongoing construction around the Kali river have now migrated to the Tillari river basin in Maharashtra, where they are reportedly wreaking havoc.

"The herd that was displaced from the Kali region — and may have been responsible for the deaths of the three Goans from the foothills of the Western Ghats — is currently in the Tillari river basin," disclosed Kerkar.

"Disturbing animal ecosystems is perilous. If prudence is not exercised in resolving the Mhadei dispute, similar incidents may recur in Goa. The consequences could be severe," he warned. Several streams feed into the Mhadei, including those from Bejao, but Kerkar highlights three as particularly significant: Banduri, Pant, and Singur. Among them, Banduri is a perennial nullah that contributes a large quantum of water — a key point Goa is attempting to establish with evidence before the court.

The Banduri nullah region, Kerkar explains, lies within the highly sensitive Khanapur forest range of the Western Ghats, home to tigers, sloth bears, king cobras, and many other rare and indigenous species.

"Locals in the area derive most of their potable and irrigation water from the Banduri nullah. Any attempt to divert its flow could have far-reaching consequences, especially if its ecological importance is overlooked," he cautioned.

The tribunal originally set up to resolve the dispute gave its decision in 2018. However, Kerkar points out that Goa, Maharashtra, and Karnataka have all since filed petitions before the Supreme Court.

"So far, no hearing has taken place. Therefore, no determination has been made regarding the availability of sufficient data to assess the basin's yield or the amount of water that can be awarded," claims Kerkar.

Over 2,300 booked for smoking, spitting in S Goa

MARGAO: Despite the Goa Prohibition of Smoking and Spitting Act, 1997 clearly prohibiting smoking and spitting in public places, South Goa police have reported a record 2,318 persons booked under the Act as of April 20, 2025.

The law states that "no person shall smoke or spit in any place of public work or use," including public service vehicles. Yet violations continue unabated, particularly in commercial and high-footfall areas.

Margao, being the commercial hub of South Goa, has witnessed numerous instances of such violations at business premises, public offices, and tourist hotspots. However, the number of cases booked by the Margao Police Station remains surprisingly low, with only 69 cases registered up to April 20, 2025.

In contrast, Vasco Railway Police Station recorded the highest number of offences with 280 cases, followed by Ponda Police Station with 270, Airport Police Station with 223, Cunclim Police Station with 216, Collem Police Station with 212, Curchorem Police Station with 160, Maina-Curtorim Police Station with 132, Quepem Police Station with 118, Sanguem Police Station with 116, and Colva Police Station with 80. Mormugao Police Station registered only three cases.

A senior police officer acknowledged that, despite awareness drives and enforcement measures, individuals continue to flout the law by smoking in public spaces. "The crackdown will continue, and action will be taken against defaulters," he said.

According to police data, South Goa police stations booked a total of 7,089 cases under the Act up to December 18, 2024, compared to 5,947 cases booked in 2023.
