Lumpy skin disease outbreak among stray cattle scares Siolim residents

Team Herald

SIOLIM: A rising outbreak of contagious Lumpy skin disease (LSD) among stray cattle in the Siolim Marna and Siolim Sodiem panchayat areas has alarmed local authorities, veterinary staff and animal welfare groups. The disease, which causes visible and severe lumps on the animals' skin, is spreading rapidly and putting both infected and healthy cattle at risk.

The disease is spreading rapidly and with no one to care for the stray bovines, the animals are often found dying by the roadside with stray dogs feasting on the decayed animals, said villagers lashed out at the panchayat for turning a blind eye to the issue.

Despite efforts to impound stray cattle, the situation remains grim. With no adequate grazing grounds, an increasing number of concrete constructions and insufficient fodder in cow sheds, cattle continue to roam freely on village roads. Locals estimate that around 800 cows are left astray at any given time, heightening the threat of further infection.

The spread of the disease has put veterinary personnel and goushala staff in a difficult position, as handling and treating these animals pose a risk of cross-contamination. Moreover, NGOs have expressed reluctance to shelter infected animals due to fear of endangering

Lumpy skin disease is a viral infection in cattle characterised by fever, skin nodules and significant economic impact due to reduced milk production and hide quality healthy livestock within their premises.

Siolim Sodiem Biodiversity Management Committee (BMC) confirmed the seriousness of the matter and directed the Panchayat and Health authorities to take up the matter immediately.

"After the BMC brought this issue to our notice, the panchayat has informed the Animal Husbandry authorities to work out a solution to this vexatious issue," sarpanch Deepa Naik said.

"Our demand does not end here. We strongly feel that each cattle owner should look after his or her cattle and minimise stray cattle incidents. Once these cattle are infected or meet with accidents, the owners disown them. This is very sad," she added.

Government regulations mandate that each panchayat take strict action against stray cattle, including impounding them or relocating them to goushalas. Some aggrieved residents have also suggested fitting ear chips to the cows to identify and trace negligent owners.

"It is a great pity to see these cows affected with this sickness and moving on village streets," said William Fernandes, Marna panch and added that he would request the goushala as to take care of the impounded cattle.

However, Veterinary Officer of the Siolim Government Veterinary Centre, Dr Kripa Acharya, expressed optimism regarding the treatment of infected animals. "Such cases have not so far been brought to light, but if they are, they can be treated by following the necessary SOPs to prevent the disease from spreading," she assured. Dr Acharya however said that there are a large number of strays in the village and requested the panchayats and NGOs to join hands in treating the strays.

Fourth arrest in Rs 10 cr Ambergris smuggling case

Team Herald

SANGUEM: In a major breakthrough, the Sanguem Police have arrested a fourth individual in connection with the illegal smuggling of whale vomit (ambergris).

The accused has been identified as Sachin Mhatre from Mumbai. He was produced before the Judicial Magistrate First Class (JMFC), Sanguem, who remanded him in police custody for three days.

This arrest is part of an ongoing investigation into the illicit trade of ambergris — a rare and highly valuable marine substance often used in the perfume industry.

Last week, the police had arrested three others: Sainath Shet (50) from Ponda, Ratnakar Karapurkar (55) from Mormugao, and Yogesh Redkar (45) from Sindhudurg. They were caught with 5.7 kg of ambergris, valued at approximately 10.06 crore, at Dabamol, Sanguem.

On Tuesday, the three were produced before the JMFC, Sanguem, and were granted bail after the conclusion of their four-day police custody.

Ambergris, commonly referred to as "whale vomit," is a prohibited substance under the Wildlife Protection Act due to its link with endangered species.
