This family has beinvolved, each member come well-known in Quepem contributing to different aspects of the idol-making. for their exquisite handmade idols, which grace numerous homes during the festival. The family's journey in idol-making began over 35 years ago. Today, Ulhas Shetkar, who learned the craft from his father, continues this tradition with the same dedication and passion, along with his sons and daughter. With Ganesh Chaturthi set to be celebrated on September 7, artisans across Salcete, Quepem, and nearby areas are busy putting the final touches on their idols, which they have been meticulously crafting for the past two months. Ulhas, who is currently finishing up around 200 idols for this season, emphasised that the work is not done for profit. "We make these idols with great devotion, setting aside the profit motive. Our 78uancestors never made any profit from this trad either. This is a tedious job that requires a lot of concentration," he explained. The process of making these idols is labour-intensive, starting nearly three months before the festival. The clay used for the idols is sourced from nearby
